Looking for the Physical: Sculpture and Drawings by Katherine Gili

10 November - 13 December 2016

Private View: Thursday 10 Nov, 6.30-8.30pm

Ealing, London W5, October 25, 2016 – Felix & Spear Gallery is pleased to present an exhibition of sculpture and drawings by internationally recognised British sculptor Katherine Gili (born 1948).

“This is the first time any drawings have been shown alongside my sculpture. They do not correspond in time, the sculptures are selected from works made over a period of twenty plus years since 1989, and the drawings were done in two years from 1994 at a time when circumstances made it difficult to get into the studio regularly to work on sculpture.

They are explorations in their own right, the result of intense looking and drawing from my own hands. I was not thinking about a direct relationship to any sculpture I might make, in fact trying to make sculpture directly from a drawing I find totally frustrating and impossible. But I was looking for something particular in the physical relationships of each articulation which perhaps has found its way in some new form into my sculpture.”

“Looking is a marvellous thing of which we know but little. Through it we are turned absolutely towards the outside, but when we are most of all so, things happen in us that have waited longingly to be observed; and while they reach completion in us their significance grows up in the object outside.” Rainer Maria Rilke – letters to his wife Clara, 1907.

Many artists have in the past placed great emphasis on looking as a fundamental part of their endeavour and a few have refined this thinking in terms of getting close to nature; or more precisely; to reality. It is easy to slip past these aphorisms and take them as read or even irrelevant. It is easy to see ourselves as separate from reality but; we are inescapably part of the reality we think we look upon. It flows through us and we flow through it and what one looks for; how one looks and what one makes of what is seen; is termed “imagination” and that process is not linear.

In looking; Katherine Gili is not trying to make a record of or a visual translation of what she has seen but is training herself to recognise, internalise and empathise with those forces which exist in the physical world, which of course we can feel but cannot see. This is not a contradiction for although we know of, tensions, compressions and torsions as well as gravity, these on their own would remain as scientific observations were it not for the fact of their capacity to enervate and articulate matter. The point at which sculpture departs from its commonalities with other visual art forms is in its potential to create an illusion of these forces acting in combination through a material. The sculptor; suitably attuned and having absorbed both, consciously and subconsciously, the emotional knowledge physical experience conveys, seeks then to battle with a material with its properties and limitations, to bring something about. The result is the synthesis and expression of unique three-dimensional structure.

ABOUT KATHERINE GILI

Katherine Gili was born in Oxford in 1948; graduated from Bath Academy of Art in 1970 and then studied for two years at St Martin’s School of Art. She subsequently taught at a number of art schools; most notably St Martin’s and Norwich between 1972 and 1985.

Her sculpture was exhibited for the first time in 1973 and well over a hundred times since. Gili’s career is marked by solo shows in London and New York and by contributions to seminal survey exhibitions at major venues such as the Hayward Gallery. In recent years, she has regularly shown in the Royal Academy Summer Exhibitions and notably in 2013 her sculpture “Ripoll” won the Sculpture Prize.

Katherine Gili's work is represented in the Arts Council Collection and other public and corporate collections in the UK, Switzerland and the USA. Lord Foster selected one of her pieces to stand alongside the Cranfield University Institute of Technology Library which was designed by Foster Associates in 1992.

Her sculptures can also be found in many private collections in Britain, Spain and the USA.
